"Oh, gee! What a 'boob' he was to give that guy one in the 'groove."

Writes George Young in the Philadelphia Ledger. How often have you heard that expression at a base ball game? Almost every time "Gavvy" Cravath, the champlon home-run clouter of the major leagues, lands one into the bleachers or over the right field fence some one in the crowd is sure to say "Serves him right for 'grooving' the ball!" They used to say it about J. Franklin Baker before the American League "home-run king" retired to pastiming in a county league.

From the time the Trappe, Md., farm-tranking the part of the system. It is a county league.

From the time the Trappe, Md., farm-tranking the batter is one of the most important parts of the system. It is a catcher's duty to know every batsman in the league, and, if possible, to know what kind of a ball be can hit and what he cannot hit, and to coach his pitcher in keeping the ball out of "the groove." The better he can do this the better catcher he is, and it is just as important in his work as it is to stand back of the bat and receive the ball from the pitcher or to nail a base "Oh, gee! What a boob he was to plate until they got a ball "in their

From the time the Trappe, Md., farmer broke into major league base ball from the Reading Tristate League team and his batting eye was brightened by what he picked up as a member of the Athletics, every player on ber of the Athletics, every player on ber of the Athletics, every player on a constant of the lot, the fan shufflest about in big seet the seet the seet the seet of the lot, the fan shufflest about in big seet the From the time the Trappe, Md., farmthe other seven clubs in the American League and the New York Glants in the National League, who met Baker in two world series, tried to find out "weakness." Some pitchers thought they knew it, and every time one of them fanned the slugger he decided that he had discovered what Baker couldn't hit. But Baker continued to hit home runs just the same

Probably Do Have a Weakness. It is the same with Cravath of the

Phillies, Vic Saler of the Chicago Cubs, nament of the Columbia Country Club arry Doyle of the New York Giants, will be brought to an end this week Sherwood Magee of the Boston Braves and a few more of the "leather-killers."

Probably all of these heavy hitters have a weakness that is known to one or more pitchers in the National League. Maybe Ty Cobb, the premier batsman of the world; Joe Jackson of Cleveland. Tris Speaker of the Boston Red Sox and some more of the American League's star batsmen are weak hitters against certain kinds of pitching, but year after year these men go on hitting just the same, and every time one of them lands on a ball for a hit that "cleans up," or happens to come at a critical stage of a game where it does a lot of damage, there is the same old cry, "Grooved that one." Finding a batter's weakness is one of the fine points of base ball, "and it is a most important factor in the system of play that is usually followed by a winning team. Coule Mack, George Stallings, Clark (fr...fith and the other managers who have adopted the "players' meetings" as part of their daily drill and schooling make this one of the most important lessons taught to the players, particularly the youngsters who may spend the greater part of the season on the Sherwood Magee of the Boston Braves and that for July gotten under way icularly the youngsters who may spend he greater part of the season on the

It is often the work of one or more players on the bench to do nothing but note the kind of ball that a certain batter hits, how he hits it and in what direction. Another will watch the way a certain player stands, whether he pulls a ball that is inside or goes after the ones on the outside of the plate. It is a case of studying the batter all the is a case of studying the batter all the time. With the manager on the bench it is the same. Often he may be seen making a mark on his score card after a man makes a hit or strikes out. He is not keeping score; he is marking down what kind of a ball was pitched to the batter and what he did with it. The man on the coaching line is probably keeping tabs, too, so with these watchers, in addition to the players in the field, particularly the catcher, there does not seem to be a chance of missing a batsman's "weakness," if he has one. s a case of studying the batter all the urse, the pitcher cannot always get the ball just where he wants it, to prevent the batter from hitting This is where control counts. During the world series of 1911, between the Athletics and New York Giants, Baker hit one of his history-making "homers" off Rube Marquard and the eccentric southpaw was criticised for giving Baker "one in the groove." Christy Mathewson, who was supposed to be written or specific products and the supposed to be written.

to be writing a series of special articles, was credited with having taken Marquard to task for giving Baker one he could hit over the fence.

"Keep it high on the inside" was Matty's advice to Rube. In the next game, with Mathewson pitching, Baker hit another homer, and after the Athletics had won that game Mathewson

Works Down to Last Round Again hit another homer, and after the Ath-letics had won that game Mathewson was asked what kind of a ball he pitched to J. Franklin. He said: "I tried to put one across his shoulders and on the inside corner of the plate, but I must have slipped it right through the groove for him." The same old allhi-has been given hundreds of times, and will be given again so long as the slug-gress continue to slug the ball and the iers continue to try for the batter's "weakness."

There were heavy hitters in the olden days, and it is likely that some of the old timers had a "weakness." but the players and managers did not think so much of the "inside game" in those days and there was little effort made to learn if a player who was known to be a rlugger had such a thing as a batting "weakness" concealed about his system. If the great Ed Delahanty of the Phillies had a weakness no one ever tem. If the great Ed Deiahanty or the Phillies had a weakness no one ever found it, for "Big Ed" was still slugging the best of pitchers up until the time he jumped from the Phillies to the time he jumped from the Phillies to the right track, as more members have right track, as more members have American League, where he was play-ing when he died. right track, as more members have Fitzgerald, Smith and Branch also played a stellar part in the attraction. Vernon Roberts, the promising juvenile, took next highest score, getting sixteen runs, retiring besore, getting sixteen runs, retiring besore, getting sixteen runs, retiring because le was run out. Mr. Smith, formerly a member of one of the fastest creke teams on the other side of the water, surprised the spectators with his swift bowling and well controlled arm.

The same teams will play a match tomorrow, and a record crowd is expected to see the battle, as Smith, the new bowler, and Dr. J. S. Cannon will do slab work. The grounds are in Potonian Park opposite the new bureau of engraving and printing building.

Vice President's Team Wins From Captain's by 102 to 42.

Umpire overruled the claim. Was heright or wrong? (3) If the umpire had declared Brownle out without an appeal from any one, would his decision not have been supported by rule 57.

M. H. L. (1) Right. (2) Right. The scorekeeper posed of members of the Washington Cricket Club, the Captain's team and the Vice President's team, played an interesting match, the result being 102 to 42 in favor of the Vice President's team.

Willie Warren, after being out of the game some time, showed great form embedded in the foregoing answers.

A man on first a man on third. The batter hits a foul five over the left field foul line. Left fielder goes after and catches it. Now, then, when the ball is caught, has the man on third the right to try to make the run, and has the man on first the right to try to make the run. And has the man on first the right to try to make second? JAMES McCARTHY.

Sporting Editor Star:

A man on third, a man on second, no one out and the batter drives the hal to the nitcher, who helds the same, runs to the base line and waits for the runner. The runner stone and starts back toward the plate, but does not go out of the base line. Pitcher goes lack to his box and runner then starts to first and makes it. Umsire calls him safe.
